JUDGE GALBRAITH

TALKS OF HAWAII

INTERESTING INTERVIEW WITH HIM IN A KANSAS CITY
PAPER.

Meets Old Friends From Oklahoma, of Which Territory He Was Attorney
General During Cleveland's Last
Term—Will Return this Month.

From the Kansas City Journal.

Clinton A. Galbraith of Honolulu, one of the associate judges of the supreme court of Hawaii, was a visitor in Kansas City yesterday. Last night he went to St. Louis to visit friends and he will shortly make a trip to Oklahoma and Texas. He expects to sail on his return trip to Hawaii before the middle of December.

Judge Galbraith was attorney general of Oklahoma Territory during the last administration of President Cleveland. Last night he was one of the congenial spirits who met at the Midland hotel and recalled reminiscences of life in "the land of the fair god." The others in the party were Colonel John V. Moffitt, formerly of El Reno, and Otto Bekemeyer, a Guthrie newspaper man, who was private secretary to Governor W. C. Renfrow of Oklahoma when Judge Galbraith was attorney general. The three were intimate friends when they all lived in what they last night agreed is "God's country." They are all "good fellows" as well as successful men.

Between the Oklahoma stories Judge Galbraith sandwiched interesting pictures of life in America's oceanic territory, which since its annexation is governed in the same manner as is Oklahoma. He went to Honolulu several years ago and engaged in the practice of law. In last July he was appointed by President McKinley as the democratic member of the Hawaiian supreme bench. There is one chief and one other associate justice.

Excited Over Politics.
"When I left Honolulu the politics were just in the midst of the excitement of the political campaign," said Judge Galbraith. "You see, we elect a delegate to congress in the same manner as the continental territories, and we enjoy the same political rights as the states, except that we cannot vote for president. The torchlight and brass band features do not play a prominent part in our Hawaiian campaigns, but enthusiasm is an article which we have in quantities, for all that. At our political meetings we hold a 'luau,' which is a big feast. There the people indulge in gin drinking—gin is the national beverage of Hawaii—and in feasting upon pig, sea weed and other delicacies. When the participants have become sufficiently 'limbered up,' so to speak, the spell-binding begins. This idea of serving a 'luau' at political meetings isn't altogether a bad one, for the gin puts the people in such a frame of mind that they are willing to listen to all of the speaking the spellbinders have to force upon them."

"There are about 12,000 registered voters on the islands, and 8,000 of these are natives. We had three candidates for congressional delegate this year, all of whom were native born Hawaiians. The republican candidate was Sam Parker and the democratic nominee was Prince David, who was a delegate to the Kansas City convention. R. W. Wilcox ran as an independent."

and was known as an "anti-haole" candidate. He represented the people who are opposed to Governor Dole's appointees. The Governor of Hawaii, like the executives of all American territories, has many opponents.

What Queen Liliuokalani is doing at Honolulu in dignified retirement. She recognizes the fact that the restoration of the monarchy is an impossibility and she advises her followers to quietly submit to the inevitable and become peaceable and law-abiding American citizens. She is displaying excellent taste and tact. A great majority of the people of the islands are pleased with annexation. In fact all of them whose power has not been curtailed recognize that the existing system of government is superior to that which formerly obtained.

Hawaiians as a rule are not thrifty people. It must be acknowledged that they are not fond of work. Sugar and rice are grown upon the islands, but the former is by far the more important product. The exports of sugar this year amounted to $30,000,000. Labor is nearly all Asiatic. The climate is uniformly warm, the temperature ranging from 70 to 90 degrees the year round. There is no question but that Hawaii is a great territory. They are both great territories, Hawaii and Oklahoma.

Judge Galbraith was accompanied by Mrs. Galbraith, who was the guest of Mrs. John V. Moffitt yesterday.

The schooner Kawaihewa, which was around on the windward side of this island, arrived yesterday morning. She will be put on the marine railway and repairs will be made to her keel which is thought to be badly damaged.
